YOUR ACCESS
The approved email you gave Aneeket

The short version: Use Dungeon personally. Keep its private content inside the test. A broad recommendation is welcome; copying, screenshots outside the cohort, or sharing access is not.

1. What you may do

- Use Dungeon personally for revision and give honest feedback.
- Discuss the test with Aneeket and authorised testers inside the designated private community.
- Recommend Dungeon in broad terms without describing private questions, screens, mechanics, or implementation.
- Ask Aneeket to invite a friend separately if you think they should try it.

2. What must stay inside the test

Do not share outside the authorised tester group:

- literal or substantially similar questions, answer choices, answers, explanations, passages, caselets, prompts, or the question-bank structure;
- screenshots, recordings, photographs, copied text, exports, dashboard views, or progress views;
- detailed feature behaviour, private workflows, scoring, difficulty or recommendation logic, unreleased designs, access links, or security details; and
- private feedback or unpublished material supplied by Aneeket.

A vague recommendation or high-level statement that Dungeon is a revision tool is fine. When unsure, ask Aneeket before sharing.

3. Personal access only

Your approved email acts as your Dungeon password. Do not give it to another person for entering Dungeon, let another person use your logged-in browser, or allow anyone else to practise in your account. Use one active browser at a time and sign out before changing devices. A friend who wants access must be invited separately.

4. No copying or competing reproduction

Do not scrape, bulk-download, reverse engineer, plagiarise, republish, sell, adapt, or use private test material to reproduce Dungeon or build a substantially similar question bank, dashboard, workflow, or product. Do not help another person do so. Ordinary personal use and good-faith bug reporting are allowed.

5. Security and data notice

To grant access, save progress, and identify obvious account sharing, Dungeon stores your approved email, revision progress and attempts, an opaque session-token hash, timestamps, the Cloudflare country code seen at first login, and account-lock state. Dungeon does not request precise GPS location. Cloudflare may process ordinary network and security metadata.

Only one active browser session is permitted for an approved email. A request from a different country can immediately lock the Dungeon account. Travel, VPNs, mobile networks, and routing can cause legitimate changes, so Aneeket reviews a lock; a lock is not by itself proof of misconduct.

6. Access and consequences

Access is a revocable invitation, not a purchase or permanent entitlement. Aneeket may suspend access while checking a security signal. A confirmed material breach - including credential sharing, giving unauthorised access, publishing private material, or attempting to copy the product - may result in immediate permanent removal from Dungeon, future closed tests, and other Aneeket-controlled services, subject to applicable law. Revocation deletes active Dungeon sessions and server-side Dungeon progress.

7. Early-test limits

Dungeon is provided for testing and revision support. It may change, contain errors, or become temporarily unavailable. It does not guarantee an exam result and does not replace official course materials, instructions, or academic judgement.

8. Acceptance

No signature is needed. The first time you sign in with your approved email, Dungeon shows a short version of these terms, and you tick the acknowledgement box and choose Accept and enter. Dungeon records only which version you accepted and when.

☒ “I have read and agree to the closed tester terms.”

Ticking that box at first login confirms you understand these boundaries, will keep your access personal, and will ask Aneeket before sharing anything that may reveal the private test. If you would rather not agree, close the page and tell Aneeket; nothing else happens.

Questions, lock reviews, withdrawal, correction, or deletion requests: contact Aneeket privately through the onboarding channel.
